

Proposal
(applicant's name)

My proposal is for a study abroad experience next year at the University of London, King's College London in London, England. This experience would be for the entire year, so as to fully immerse myself in the study of English History. Spending the year in London not only offers the extraordinary opportunity of living and studying in a foreign country, but studying a field in its native environment. Furthermore, King's College London offers specialized classes in English History that would broaden my knowledge of the field exponentially. The modules, or classes, that I plan on taking are "The Nobility and Gentry of Medieval England, 1150-1500", "The History of the British Empire and Commonwealth", and "Britain: 1400-1750", for a total of thirty credits. These three classes will provide an in-depth scope on English history ranging from the middle ages to early modern Europe.

After exploring the wide array of universities available in England, it became very evident that King's College London at the University of London is the best possible institution to spend my junior year. The modules offered by the college fit my academic interests very well, allowing for a specialization in exactly the areas of history I wish to study. The location of KCL was also a major factor in my decision, with its proximity to many museums in central London. As my intended career is to be a Public Historian in a museum setting, such proximity allows for ample access to some of the most famous museums in the world. The opportunity to volunteer or intern at a museum in London would be unparalleled in real world experience, networking prospects, and sheer educational value. The reputation of the University of London is one of excellent scholarship, as it is considered one of the best universities in England. Successful study at such a prestigious institution could only further aid me in the competitive field I will one day be apart of. Its combination of serious scholarship, extensive specialization, prime location and city atmosphere makes studying abroad at University of London's King's College London the best possible step in furthering my education.
