Online Master's Program Ranks in the Top Ten

IUP's Online Criminology Master's program currently is ranked in the top ten best online graduate criminal justice programs by U.S. News and World Report. "We think our program is good, but it was nice to have other people acknowledge that as well," said Dr. Jennifer Gossett, the current coordinator of the online program. The program has a student retention rate of almost 100%. Dr. Gossett believes this success stems from dedicated faculty teaching in the program. The program also offers electives focusing on terrorism, cybercrime, juvenile justice, corrections and special topic classes such as teaching for a community college. U.S. News and World Report ranks programs based on several factors, including class structure, faculty credentials, academic support, career support, and student engagement in the program.

The online program started in 2009 as a part-time program, which took approximately two years to complete. Beginning fall 2015, students will be able to attend either full or parttime. A full-time student will be able to complete the program in one year. Classes during the fall and spring semesters will now be seven weeks long and students can take two seven-week classes at a time. Hopefully students, especially working professionals, will see this change as a better option because it offers more flexibility. Faculty who teach graduate classes on campus will teach online as well. Students in the online program will have access to the library and other campus resources. Online graduate students also have the opportunity to apply for graduate assistantships. The department strives to meet the needs of our alumni as well as new students who want to enter into the criminal justice field.

Alumni Spotlight: C. Edward Keller

C. Edward Keller entered the Criminology program at IUP because he wanted to be a Pennsylvania State Trooper. While at IUP, Mr. Keller got a job with campus security, which was housed in Sutton Hall. While there, he would talk to Pennsylvania State Troopers who encouraged him to apply. His sophomore year, Mr. Keller married his high school sweetheart and wife of forty-two years, Judy. Mr. Keller graduated in 1974 with a Bachelor's Degree in Criminology

When graduated, Mr. Keller the Pennsylvania State Police were under a hiring freeze, so Mr. Keller applied and was accepted into the September 1974 Maryland State Trooper Academy class. He became President of the class and graduated after a grueling 24 weeks. As a reward for being named class President, he chose to go to the Frederick, Maryland Barracks. Most new Trooper graduates were assigned to the beltways around Washington, D.C and Baltimore. Mr. Keller was promoted twice: from Trooper to Trooper First Class and from Trooper First Class to Corporal (Road Patrol Supervisor). The second promotion took him to the Waldorf, Maryland Barracks. He says the IUP Criminology program helped with his career as a Trooper. While working as a Maryland State Trooper he was recruited by a Federal Bureau of Investigation agent who was assigned to Frederick. Working for the FBI sounded very intriguing to Mr. Keller.

He attended the FBI Academy in January of 1983. Mr. Keller began working as a Special Agent in Baltimore, Maryland and then went to Columbus, Ohio. While in Columbus, Mr. Keller worked on a case involving the United Freedom which was an American Marxist Front. organization that was active in the 1970s and 1980s and responsible for numerous bombings and bank robberies. The organization targeted courthouses, military facilities, and corporate buildings. This investigation led to the arrests of two of the members who were both on the FBI's top ten fugitives list. After Columbus, Mr. Keller went to the Youngstown, Ohio office. It was there that he was able to work on three successful undercover operations including a stolen property case. With Mr. Keller's expertise, the FBI was able to recover $1.4 million in stolen vehicles and equipment. He was also a primary undercover agent in a high profile corruption case where forty-seven individuals were convicted of charges including extortion, obstruction of justice, and narcotics violations.

In 1991, Mr. Keller was transferred to the Houston Division. There he supervised a multiagency violent crime task force. While driving his car down the highway in 1993, a car pulled up next to Mr. Keller. He looked over and noticed the driver who was a man wanted for a brutal murder that occurred a week prior. Mr. Keller called in and got behind the car. This resulted in a forty-five mile high speed chase with police cars and a failed barricade, and ended with a road block in the state of Louisiana with shots being fired. In 1999, Mr. Keller became a supervisor at the FBI headquarters in Washington, D.C. He was assigned to the Criminal Investigative Division and oversaw gang investigations throughout the eastern and mid-western parts of the United States. He was in Washington, D.C. for two years and then became the Senior Resident Agent in Charge at Lake Charles, Louisiana, Mr. Keller remained in Louisiana until he retired in 2003. Over his twenty year career with the FBI, Mr. Keller received numerous honors and awards for outstanding work. He had a very successful career and credits it to his dedicated work ethic and to the relationships that he nurtured all over the country. Mr. Keller worked hard to acquire and maintain good relationships with local and state law enforcement agencies as well as individuals from other federal agencies.

After Mr. Keller retired in 2003, he took a job with the Beaumont Foundation of America in Beaumont, Texas. The Beaumont Foundation was created in 2001 using funds from a class action lawsuit. Unclaimed funds from the lawsuit were used to develop a foundation for the public good. This was the brain-child of a plaintiff's attorney Wayne Reaud, who became Chairman of the Board. The organization's mission was to buy computer equipment for schools, churches and non-profit organizations, such as the Salvation Army and the Boys and Girls Club of America, and to provide more opportunities to the underprivileged. Mr. Keller oversaw the distribution of the computers and made sure that the recipient organizations were using the technology as required.

In 2006, the Beaumont Foundation began working with foster care homes and food banks in Texas. The Foundation provides clothing stipends to foster care children. The Foundation also provides scholarships for both teachers and students and provides grants in support of health care. Over one hundred million in grants and scholarships have been awarded since 2002. Mr. Keller is now the Chief Operating Officer and directs the day-to-day operations of the Beaumont Foundation.

C. Edward Keller Scholarship

The Department of Criminology and Criminal Justice is proud to announce the C. Edward Keller scholarship. Mr. Keller wants to have a scholarship at his alma mater, IUP. He is looking for future students (currently high school seniors) who are the brightest, the most capable and who have a financial need. He is hoping that the scholarship will provide a better future for a student. The scholarship will cover first year tuition, fees, and books. If the student is successful in the first year, the scholarship will continue for up to an additional three years. Mr. Keller particularly thanks the generosity of Mr. Wayne Reaud, Chairman, and Directors Jon Huntsman, Sr. and Gilbert I. Low for this scholarship opportunity. If the program is successful, Mr. Keller hopes to expand in the future.

Doctoral Program Receives Praise

Recognition for the department came in the form of a study, "Publication Productivity of Criminologists," published in the Journal of Crime Justice Education last fall. The study's authors, Ellen Cohn and David Farrington, investigated the productivity of members of the American Society of Criminology in terms of their scholarly publishing in criminology journals.

While there are 47 doctoral programs in criminology and criminal justice in the United States, graduates of IUP's PhD in Criminology program made up 10 percent of the top 50 scholars cited in the study for 2010-11. Department chair Robert Mutchnick described the results as "a strong statement about how our graduates are prepared to compete."

Program alumni on the list of top scholars were George Higgins D'01; Brian Payne '88, M'90, D'93; Shaun Gabbidon D'96; Tina Freiburger D'07; and Catherine Marcum D'08.

Get to Know Dean Mark Correia

Dr. Mark Correia is the current Dean of the College of Health and Human Services. Dean Correia joined Indiana University of Pennsylvania on June 1, 2013. Dean Correia has a Bachelor's Degree in Justice, a Master's Degree in Criminal Justice, and a PhD in Political Science. Before accepting the position at IUP, Dean Correia was familiar with the Criminology program because of its excellent reputation and faculty. Dean Correia was drawn to IUP because of the "sense of community and belonging" and since taking the position he has felt very welcome.

Dean Correia believes that his job is to "create space and opportunity for students, faculty and staff to be successful" and this involves networking with alumni, finding opportunities for internships, and working with personnel. He wants to work with departments to move the College forward. Dean Correia loves his position. He enjoys working with faculty and feels there is a positive energy in the College. He also enjoys meeting alumni and retired faculty. IUP has over 120,000 alumni worldwide and they are incredible people.

Dean Correia has a lot of plans for the College. He wants the College to become more involved in providing a comprehensive approach to complex community issues and to help drive the University's mission forward. He would like to see the College develop new academic programs to bring students with different interests to the University. He also would like to see students and faculty involved in the leadership of the University. For the Department of Criminology and Criminal Justice, Dean Correia wants the program to continue to grow, "continue on a path of innovation" and develop new programs.

Dean Correia also recently attended the Academy of Criminal Justice Sciences (ACJS) annual conference. A department reception was held and Dean Correia enjoyed hearing about the success of alumni. It also was nice for him to see current students, faculty, alumni, and friends and colleagues of the department interact.

Criminology Professor Becomes Dean of the Graduate School

Dr. Randy Martin has taken a position as Dean of the School of Graduate Studies and Research at Indiana University of Pennsylvania. Dr. Martin, who holds a PhD in Psychology, taught in the Criminology Department since He joined the department when the 1986. doctoral program was just starting and actually chaired the first dissertation. He was previously the Master's program coordinator and doctoral program coordinator. Dr. Martin became the Department Chair seven years ago, after being elected. He served two terms and had planned to rejoin the faculty. However, the Dean of the College of Health and Human Services asked Dr. Martin to become Associate Dean of the College. Less than a year later, on March 9, 2015, Dr. Martin joined the School of Graduate Studies and Research.

The position of Dean of the School of Graduate Studies and Research (SGSR) entails two main areas: graduate academics and research. Dean Martin and the SGSR provide support services to graduate students and to departments with graduate programs and process theses and dissertations. Dean Martin is the Research Integrity Officer and is responsible for investigating cases of research misconduct. As Dean of the SGSR, he oversees other issues related to research, such as the Institutional Review Board, and funding for travel and research. He is IUP's liaison with the Research Institute, which is a separate nonprofit organization that facilitates the grant process.

Though new to the position, Dean Martin is familiar with graduate education and has a lot of plans, His goals are to determine what services and support are provided and what else the School of Graduate Studies and Research can do to support the University's mission. He wants to work on program revision and development to stay current with the needs of our ever changing society. There are fortyeight graduate programs at IUP and Dean Martin wants to provide support for those who currently are involved in research and those who want to become involved. He also would like to enhance external funding for graduate assistantships.

Alumni Panel Discusses Careers in Criminology and Criminal Justice

The alumni career panel is held every year and gives students the opportunity to hear from opportunities, alumni about job career development, and current issues facing the criminal justice system. On February 26, 2015, the Department of Criminology and Criminal Justice invited five alumni to speak to current The alumni included: Raymond students. Robinson (BA), who works for the Shuman Detention Center; Stephanie L. Ackley (BA, MA), who does reentry services at Pine Grove Prison; Angela Lane (BA, MA), who works as a United States Postal Inspector: Patrick Dougherty (BA), who is the current Indiana County District Attorney; and Abby L. Blazavich in Child Development and (BA Family Relations), who works for the Pennsylvania State Police. Alumni were asked about the courses they would recommend for future criminal justice professionals. Taking a foreign language (specifically Spanish), psychology classes, and public speaking courses were Alumni also discussed the recommended. importance of social media in their jobs. Social media can affect the reputation of police officers and departments and it can be used as an investigative tool by both police officers and future employers. Students were cautioned to be very careful about what they post online. Upon being asked about the best advice they ever received, Raymond Robinson stated "give respect to get it" and Patrick Dougherty insisted "be on time, be respectful."

The History of Wilson: The More Recent Decades

The State Teacher's College at Indiana became Indiana University of Pennsylvania in 1965. Until 1969, Wilson Hall was used by the Departments of Economics, Political Science, and Sociology-Anthropology (Social Studies). Special education services for the University were located on the ground floor of Wilson Hall.

In 1969, Wilson Hall was used by the Departments of Psychology and Criminology. Wilson Hall continued to be used for classroom space by various departments on campus. By 2006, Wilson Hall was in need of some updates. Students may remember dark classrooms in the basement, creaky floors, and problems with temperature control.

In 2007, IUP undertook a massive fourmillion dollar renovation of Wilson Hall. Renovations were complete by the spring semester of 2008 at which time Wilson Hall became the official home of the Department of Criminology and Criminal Justice. The twelve classrooms in the building were converted into the department office, faculty offices, an advising center for undergraduate Criminology majors, and four classrooms. The new classrooms outfitted with modern were technology, including computers and projectors.

Student Spotlight: Lori Wiester

Lori Wiester is currently a student in the Criminology master's program. She previously received her associate's degree in Criminal Westmoreland Justice from Community She then transferred to IUP and College. received her bachelor's degree in 2012. Lori came to IUP because the Criminology program is very well known and highly regarded. When she got here, she realized why the Department had such an outstanding reputation. She found the professors to be wonderful. They were eager to help her and fostered her learning in the classroom. The professors have been big supporters of all of her endeavors. She insists that she could not have picked a better department of which to be a part. It is because of the "atmosphere of learning" and the tremendous support of her professors that Lori decided to stay at IUP for her master's degree.

While in the master's program, Lori has able to work on research with been professors. She worked on a project regarding "loaded language" in the media with Dr. Jonathan Cooper and Dr. Shannon Phaneuf. She also worked on intersectionality (the intersection of race and gender) outside of the social sciences. Lori presented about this topic at the Graduate Scholar's Forum. Lori is also President of IUP's chapter of Alpha Phi Sigma, which is the national criminal justice honors society. Since she became President, she has encouraged students to become more involved with the field by qoing to conferences. Over the past year, Alpha Phi Sigma has hosted many events, including a mock oral board for those interested in law enforcement in conjunction with the Criminal Justice Training Center, a Human Trafficking Awareness day, and social meetings. The organization also has fundraised to allow students to go to national criminology and criminal justice conferences. Lori currently is working on her thesis. She is examining sentencing disparities in Pennsylvania and how age, race, and gender affect sentencing in misdemeanor (less serious) offenses.
