Department Online Master's Degree Program Ranks #8

The Department's Online Master's Degree Program is considered one of the best programs in the country, currently ranked #8 by the U.S. News and World Report. The rankings debuted at the beginning of 2016 and Dr. Jennifer Gossett, the Program Coordinator, was very excited to observe the program ranked in the top ten for the second straight year.

Dr. Gossett credits the program's flexibility and student-centered faculty, as well as other university resources for the program's national recognition. The online courses are taught by fulltime department faculty, with students having internet access to other university resources, such as the library and the testing center.

The program recently underwent changes to meet the needs of today's graduate students. Fall and spring classes are 7 ½ weeks long. Students can work and attend graduate school full- time, or attend the program part-time. Full-time enrollment allows students to complete the program in one year. Graduate assistantships are also available to online students.

The majority of the program's recent graduates work full-time, while also being full-time students. The most cited goals for attending the program are career advancement or career changes into criminology, criminal justice, or other areas requiring a Master's Degree in the social sciences. Dr. Gossett stated online students bring their professional experiences into the classroom, creating lively and insightful discussions. They are focused and dedicated to their educational goals to enhance their career opportunities. Dr. Gossett currently is recruiting for Fall 2016, with classes beginning August 29th. If you have any questions, please contact Dr. Gossett (jgossett@iup.edu).

Student Profile: Craig Lindsay

Mr. Lindsay is currently a student in the online Master's Degree program. He started in the Fall of 2014 and is graduating this semester. Mr. Lindsay wanted an online program because of the flexibility and convenience, as he is also a full-time correctional officer in Hazelton, West Virginia. He does his school work after his 4-12 shift.

The best thing about the program for Mr. Lindsay has been the people. Most of the students in his classes are familiar to him. They have been working through the courses together for the last two years. If he has a problem or a question, his classmates are there to help, as are the professors.

Mr. Lindsay has found that he has all of the resources he needs online (including the library website) to complete his courses. In fact, Mr. Lindsay has only been to campus twice: once before he enrolled, to meet some of the professors, and once to get a student ID. The first time Mr. Lindsay visited IUP, he found the department to be very welcoming and friendly. Unfortunately, on his visit, Mr. Lindsay received a parking ticket. He found out later that the chairman of the department, Dr. Mutchnick, actually paid the ticket for him.

Mr. Lindsay is doing well in his courses and is working on his Master's degree to further his educational endeavors. He is hoping, after graduation, to start a PhD program in Criminology or Criminal Justice.

Second C. Edward Keller Scholarship

The Department of Criminology and Criminal Justice is pleased to announce a second C. Edward Keller Scholarship, funded by the Beaumont Foundation. Since the inception of the scholarship last year, Mr. Keller and the Beaumont Foundation have been pleased with IUP, the department, and the first recipient, Rose Solomond. Rose has been excelling in her classes and is exceeding expectations. Due to the overwhelming success of the first scholarship, a second scholarship has been announced. The plan is to award one scholarship every year for an incoming freshman.

The scholarship committee, which includes Mr. Keller and Drs. Fitch, Mummert, and Nazaretian (from the department) was working hard to pick the top finalists for next year. Applications were due in March and the committee, including Miss Solomond, met with the finalists via video conference in April. Mr. Keller expects that Rose will serve as a mentor for the new scholarship winner, that they will be able to share their ideas and experiences.

The committee was impressed last year by the quality of students who had applied for the scholarship. An announcement email was sent to all incoming department freshmen and that very same day, applications were received.

In order to pick the finalists, the committee members were looking at various factors. The academic record of the student is the most important, and GPA, transcripts, and SAT scores were examined. The committee members also wanted to know if the student participated in activities and work while in high school. The transition from high school to college can be tough and the college student must sometimes balance school, work study, and other activities. The committee wanted to make sure that the student would be prepared and able to succeed in college. Another important aspect of the application was the essay. Committee members wanted to know why the students were interested in the Criminology and Criminal Justice program and what plans they had for the future (possible career options). The second C. Edward Keller Scholarship winner will be announced in the next edition of the newsletter. (Pictured above: Rose Solomond, first recipient, and C. Edward Keller).

Beaumont Foundation Provides Endowment

Not only has the Beaumont Foundation been gracious enough to provide funds for the C. Edward Keller Scholarship but the Foundation is now providing an endowment. The Chairman of the Board of the Beaumont Foundation, Wayne Reaud, as well as C. Edward Keller have been pleased with the scholarship. The first recipient, Rose Solomond is a member of the Honor's College and is excelling in college. Furthering the goal that students succeed at IUP, the Beaumont Foundation approached the Department and IUP about the endowment. IUP has raised $25,000 and the Beaumont Foundation will be matching it. It will be available in the future to fund the existing C. Edward Keller Scholarship. (Pictured at right: C. Edward Keller and Michael Driscoll, IUP President).

Department Welcomes Alumnus Dr. Shaun L. Gabbidon

Dr. Shaun L. Gabbidon, a Distinguished Professor of Criminal Justice, at Penn State University, Harrisburg, and a 1996 graduate of doctoral program in Criminology came back to IUP on April 12, 2016 for a presentation. Dr. Gabbidon is one of the top professors in the area of race relations. He has written 11 books, 60 peer-reviewed articles, and served as a fellow at the Harvard University W. E. B. Du Bois Institute for Afro-American Research.

In Dr. Gabbidon's presentation entitled "Shopping While Black: Understanding and Combating Profiling in Retail Settings," he discussed three projects he has been working on for about 10 years. Prior to getting his PhD, Dr. Gabbidon worked as a security manager in a retail store and noticed disparities in how racial minorities were treated (e.g. as "suspicious persons"). About 10 years into his career, he started to explore the issue further. During his presentation, he discussed the research on shoplifting, consumer rational profiling, and stereotypes of minorities.

Dr. Gabbidon then discussed some of his own research, including a victimization study and a study on people's opinions on profiling, and some of his consulting work. In his victimization study, Dr. Gabbidon found that 43% of individuals in the sample (random sample of residents in the Philadelphia area) reported that they had experienced consumer racial profiling. Sixty-nine percent of black individuals and 21% of white individuals experienced this type of profiling. He also found that 80% of those individuals who reported consumer racial profiling in the study had not reported it to the store.

Regarding the opinion study, Dr. Gabbidon asked individuals if consumer racial profiling should be used to prevent shoplifting. More than 60% of respondents opposed consumer racial profiling. Thirty-three percent of white respondents and 16% of black respondents indicated that it should be used.

Dr. Gabbidon also discussed some of the consulting work he has done. He worked with a major retail chain that needed help to address allegations of consumer racial profiling. He reviewed and revised the chain's policy manuals and worked to determine if the issue was occurring and to what degree.

Though Dr. Gabbidon has worked hard to research and address the problem of consumer racial profiling, he said there is more to be done. "Existing racial profiling scholarship has only captured 'the tip of the [racial profiling] iceberg.'"

Alumni Panel

The Department of Criminology and Criminal Justice hosted the annual Alumni Panel on March 24, 2016. Panelists included Michael Staub, former deputy chief from the Pennsylvania Office of the Attorney General, Criminal Investigations, Abby Blazavich with the Pennsylvania State Police, Brandon Bushey, a consultant with SC3, and Omar Smith from the Allegheny County Adult Probation Office.

Panelists were asked several questions, both from the moderator and from students who attended the presentation. The alumni indicated that a clean record, organizational skills, extracurricular activities, and an awareness of social media presence all make students marketable when applying for jobs. Students should seek internships in areas where they have an interest and realize that networking is extremely important. The panelists also recommended students take foreign languages and improve their computer skills while in college. All panelists suggested that their chosen fields were growing and that student opportunities would be abundant.

Some of the best professional advice the panelists received was “you can’t save the world in one day” (Trooper Blazavich) and “be professional” (Mr. Bushey). When asked what common mistakes new recruits often make, students were told to be accountable in the field, follow the policies and procedures laid out by departments/organizations, and be prepared.

Panelists also shared what they found surprising about their jobs, things they were not prepared for. Mr. Staub indicated that he was surprised at how little he knew when he first entered the field. Mr. Smith said he was surprised at how much drugs and alcohol affect people and their families.

The Alumni Panel was well attended by students, who not only asked questions during the formal presentation, but also met with panelists one-on-one afterward to ask about careers in the criminal justice system.

Celebrating 50 Years!

In 1965, President Johnson formed the Commission on Law Enforcement and Administration of Justice. After publication of the Commission's executive summary, The Challenge of Crime in a Free Society, which detailed all aspects of the criminal justice system, the Omnibus Crime Control and Safe Streets Act was passed by the United States Congress. The Act created the Law Enforcement Assistance Administration, which provided funding for Law Enforcement Education Programs.

It was around this time that the Law Enforcement program was founded at IUP. The Law Enforcement Department was started during the 1967-1968 school year. The chairman at the time, Harry More, was the only professor in the department. By the 1969-1970 school year, the department was renamed Criminology, there are a number of faculty members besides the chairman, and the program was even offering a minor.

The Criminology Department continued to grow and a Master's Program was offered in 1981. Seven years later, in 1988, the department began offering a PhD program. Changing its name one more time in 2015 to Criminology and Criminal Justice, the department has continued to grow. We have over 20 faculty members, and approximately 1,000 majors and minors on campus.

To celebrate the Criminology and Criminal Justice Department's 50th year, there are big events planned. There will be special receptions at the American Society of Criminology and the Academy of Criminal Justice Sciences conferences next year. The department is also sponsoring a T-shirt contest in which students were asked to design a T-shirt for the anniversary. T-shirts with the winning design will be sold by the Criminology Graduate Student Organization and Alpha Phi Sigma, the National Criminal Justice Honor Society.

There also will be a number of other events and celebrations, so keep checking the department Facebook page for further information.

Department Sweeps Graduate Scholar's Forum College Awards

The Graduate Scholar's Forum is an annual event at IUP in which graduate students are given the opportunity to present their original research and scholarship. Students are able to present papers, posters, and/or performances. The event was held on April 6, 2016 in the Hadley Union Building and awards were given in each college.

Graduate students from the Department of Criminology and Criminal Justice won the Dean's Award for Excellence (First Place), Second Place, and Third Place in the College of Health and Human Services competition.

Jaeyong Choi, a PhD student, won first place for his research titled "Media Cultivates Fear of Crime but for Whom? Examination of Competing Audience Hypotheses about the Impact of Media." Shavonne Arthurs, a PhD candidate, won second place for her research presentation entitled "Beyond Boozing: College Student Drinking Patterns." Lindsey Smathers, a MA student, won third place for her research presentation entitled "The Concept of Justice: An Evaluation of Comic Book Filmography."

IUP's Alpha Phi Sigma Chapter Earns High Marks at Conference

Alpha Phi Sigma is the only nationally recognized criminal justice honor society in the country. Membership is open to undergraduate majors and minors, as well as graduate students. Every year, in conjunction with the Academy of Criminal Justice Sciences conference, Alpha Phi Sigma holds a conference and members are encouraged to attend and network with criminal justice academics and practitioners. The IUP chapter of Alpha Phi Sigma fundraises to attend the conference. One of their biggest fundraisers is the candle sale around the holidays.

At the annual conference, students participate in a number of academic competitions, including a college bowl, a general knowledge test, and a specific knowledge test.

Sixteen teams participated in the college bowl this year and students were asked questions about criminal justice. Two IUP undergraduate students, Gabriel Gresko, and Tyler Parrey, participated with two undergraduate students from Rutgers and took second place in the competition. They lost by one question to a team that included graduate students. The third place team included IUP students Hali Santiago, Liz Letelier, Nicole Sweger, and Deanna Miller.

Tyler Parrey also performed very well in the undergraduate general knowledge test and scholarship. He competed against 61 other students and won the second place award overall. The specific knowledge test, which addressed rehabilitation this year, was taken by both graduate and undergraduate students from the many chapters that participated. The first place scholarship award was given to Asheley Buchwalter, a current IUP student and member of Alpha Phi Sigma.

JAILS & MENTAL HEALTH ISSUES

THE PRISON JOURNAL

US jails confine large numbers of people each day and process nearly 12 million admissions each year (Minton & Zeng, 2015). This is approximately 20 times higher than the number of admissions to prisons (Vera Institute of Justice, 2015). The Prison Journal's special January, 2016, "Jails and Mental Health Issues" focuses attention on the increasing number of mentally ill in local jails, even as jails experience overcrowding, budgetary and resource shortages, recidivism, and "invisibility" in current national policy discussions about correctional and criminal justice reform.

Authors in the special January 2016 issue document a number of key jail mental health policy and research issues:

- 1) the proper role of the jail for the delivery of behavioral healthcare and other services;
- 2) the perceptions of jail staff, treatment providers, and detainees on re-entry impediments in rural jurisdictions, particularly with regard to continued mental health services;
- 3) an evaluation of a model reentry program for detainees with substance use disorders, linking the issue of co-occurring disorders and recidivism;
- 4) a focus on female jail detainees' needs for services and programming from the perspectives of jail staff;
- 5) the role of trauma as a common experience among female jail detainees in a large urban jail and their capacities to deal with reentry impediments;
- 6) the use and abuse of solitary confinement in jails, focusing on Riker's Island as a case study and
- 7) the emergence of crisis intervention teams as a valuable tool for diverting the mentally ill from correctional to mental health settings.

Department of Criminology and Criminal Justice Advising Center

The advising center is fairly unique to the IUP Criminology and Criminal Justice Department. Instead of students being assigned to various faculty members throughout the department for advising, all students are assigned to the head of the advising center. The advising center is open five days per week and students can come in at any time for advice on scheduling, graduation, graduate school, and career paths, among other things. The advising center was started over 27 years ago by Dr. Robert Mutchnick and has been run by Dr. Kathleen Hanrahan, Dr. Jamie Martin, Dr. Jennifer Gossett, Dr. Erika Frenzel, and Dr. John Lewis. Dr. Jon Cooper is currently in charge of the advising center and he, with three doctoral students, advise students on a daily basis.

When Dr. Cooper took charge of the advising center, he did not make many changes as he “inherited something amazing that ran well.” The goals of the advising center are simple: to create a one-stop place where students can get information to help navigate their undergraduate degrees and to mentor graduate students. Regarding student advisement, students can receive help planning their schedules, get information about graduation, graduate school, law school, potential careers, connect with recruiters, and even find help dealing with academic problems. If a student is having academic issues, Dr. Cooper will work with the Dean’s Associate and connect the student with helpful resources on campus.

The advising center also provides a wonderful opportunity for doctoral students. Every year, students in the PhD program are assigned to work in the advising center. They, like Dr. Cooper, discuss the undergraduate program with students. Doctoral students learn about student advisement, how curricula works, and service to the University.

When asked about the advising center, Dr. Cooper said that he is “grateful [he] inherited this” and that he believes it is the “biggest strength” of the department. “It exists because the entire faculty is on board” and shows how much everyone in the department cares about students. Dr. Cooper is also happy to have been blessed with excellent doctoral students and he knows that they do a wonderful job helping students.

Alumni Profile: Colin O'Shea

Colin O'Shea graduated in 2008 with a Bachelor's Degree in Criminology and a minor in English. He had come to IUP because of the size of the university and because it ran in his family. His mother and aunt attended IUP and his brother is a current doctoral student here.

During his senior year, Mr. O'Shea was nominated for the Gregory W. Spinelli Memorial Scholarship, which is "awarded to students who show exceptional promise and commitment to a career in the criminal justice system." It was at that time that Mr. O'Shea began to think about the future. He knew that a Master's Degree would give him an advantage in the field and so he applied to the Criminology master's program and finished that in December of 2010.

After graduation, Mr. O'Shea began searching for a job and applied to the Crawford County, Pennsylvania District Attorney's Office as a Victim-Witness Coordinator. He insists that he would not have been hired for the position had it not been for his Master's Degree.

As a Victim-Witness Coordinator, Mr. O'Shea works to "uphold victims' rights" as afforded by the Pennsylvania Crime Victims Act. He has many duties including preparing restitution claims, filing claims for victim compensation, helping victims and witnesses prepare for trial, and accompanying victims to court. Mr. O'Shea reaches out to victims and helps them prepare their restitution claim forms and gets the forms and supporting documentation prepared for presentation to the Common Pleas Court of Crawford County. Mr. O'Shea files claims for victim compensation, which allows victims to be reimbursed for certain expenses, such as out-of-pocket medical costs, lost wages, and funeral expenses.

Mr. O'Shea also helps victims and witnesses prepare for trial. He walks these individuals through the trial process, explaining what types of questions will be asked of them and what will happen when the trial begins. He takes victims and witnesses to empty courtrooms and shows them where the key players (Judge, defendant, etc.) will be sitting and explains what will be expected of them. Mr. O'Shea accompanies victims and witnesses to court to provide support at preliminary hearings (where he explains the nature of the hearing, as well as the anticipated timeline for the case), sentencing (where he aids in the preparation and delivery of the victim impact statement), and state parole hearings.

Mr. O'Shea has been with the District Attorney's Office for five years and enjoys his job immensely. He loves that he has the ability to provide assistance to people who really need it. The job can be difficult, but he has learned to need to be flexible when working in the criminal justice system and to realize that every person is unique and every situation is different.

When asked what IUP classes best prepared him for his career, Mr. O'Shea said statistics, because he works on grant reporting, and criminal justice system classes, because they have helped him understand and explain the process to others.

New Faculty for 2016

The Department of Criminology and Criminal Justice has hired three new faculty members. Brandon Dulisse, from the University of Cincinnati, Daniel Scott, from the University of California, Irvine, and Glen Ishoy, from Georgia State University will be joining the faculty in the Fall of 2016. Look for more information about these faculty members in the Fall 2016 edition of the newsletter.
