3. Justification for Revision.

This course change is part of a package of changes including HIST 344, 345, and 346. Because the time span of "Recent United States History" inevitably expands with each passing year, it is necessary from time to time to revise the boundaries of the department's standard chronological courses in American history. In this case, the starting point of Recent United States History is changing from 1929 to 1945 and the two preceding courses are being adjusted appropriately; all three courses are being revised to incorporate new scholarship and to emphasize themes of current interest to the profession. HIST 344 and HI 345 are being given new titles to reflect their new chronological boundaries or emphases. The title "Industrializing America" reflects the intent to look at the period from multiple perspectives rather than privileging the perspective of one group, business, over all others. Because historians disagree about when the industrial revolution began and because we want students to engage in these debates, no specific beginning date for the course is being specified in the title or description. Also, as a result of earlier discussions with the university-wide graduate committee, whenever the occasion for revision of a course arises, we are not adding the prerequisite "sophomore standing; completion of HIST 195 (non-majors)" to all undergraduate courses that have a dual-level graduate equivalent.

4. Old Syllabus of Record

A search of departmental files has failed to locate an original syllabus of record; the course was created sometime in the mid-1960s before the University Senate was created and the current approval process established. This means that on the above summary of changes, we can presume that we are making changes in each of the categories, but we cannot be certain of the exact nature of the changes. For instance, there are many post-1970 books in the bibliography, and these could not possibly have been in the original proposal.

5. Liberal Studies

HI 344 INDUSTRIALIZING AMERICA

I. Catalog Description. HI 344 Industrializing America

3 credits
 3 lecture hours
 0 lab hours
 (3c-0l-3sh)

Prerequisites: Sophomore Standing; completion of HI195 (non-majors)

Study of the industrial revolution and its consequences in America through 1917. Topics include new technology and entrepreneurship, the development of middle and working class consciousness, immigration and ethnicity, gender, urban growth, the beginnings of consumer culture and commercialized leisure, intellectual developments, protest movements, and the Progressive Era's political reforms.

II. Course Objectives.

1. Students will understand the causes, nature, and consequences of the industrial revolution in America.
2. Students will understand what is happening among historians who are studying the industrial revolution in America and how current interpretations compare to earlier ones.
3. Students will strengthen critical thinking skills such as the ability to evaluate different interpretations, identify underlying assumptions, detect fallacies in reasoning, use evidence appropriately, and come individually or as a group to decisions on historical issues.
4. Students will strengthen their abilities to express their understanding of historical issues in writing.
5. Students will explore the ethical issues that emerge from a study of the industrial revolution in America.
