JN 243 History of American Journalism

3 credits 3 lecture hours (3c-01-3sh)

Prerequisites: JN 120 or JN 220 Traces the development of the American press from its colonial roots. Emphasis on the role of the press in political and social development.

JN 243--History of American Journalism Robert Russell

This course combines journalism and American history as we look at the role played by the press from our colonial period to modern times. We see how the press moved from its roots in partisan politics and propaganda during the American Revolution to a fairer, more objective approach during the years after the Civil War. We meet some of the legendary figures of the past, such as Pulitzer, Hearst and Greeley, but we'll also examine the role of less-publicized modern kingpins such as Henry Luce. And we'll discuss the latest developments such as the impact of TV on our politics. Students will take three or four exams that combine short answers and essays. They will also do two book reviews.

Part II. 3. Justification/Rational for changes.

The existing system of numbering journalism courses does not adequately reflect the sequence in which students should take them nor the relative level of difficulty of the courses. For instance, the first journalism course our students should take, Basic Journalistic Skills, Jn 106, is not our lowest numbered course. And there are a number of 300 level courses which are actually advanced senior level courses. An example would be our management course, Jn 323, Management in Mass Communications. It requires field experience. It's unquestionably a senior level course.

For reasons no one can remember, the original numbering did not adequately represent the logic and sequence of our program. The changes proposed would accurately mirror a long-existing reality. There are no changes in course content.

The changes in prerequisites proposed will merely be consonant with the renumbering we propose.
